This program by NAMI New Hampshire is offered to members of the media and others who have a role in communicating around suicide incidents and postvention response such as public health specialists, crisis response teams, public information officers, law enforcement and school/campus officials.

The way we communicate about suicide has a powerful role in suicide prevention and postvention efforts. This presentation reviews the evidence base for promoting responsible reporting of suicide and teaches participants strategies for challenging messaging assumptions/narratives about suicide and promoting safe messaging. In addition, the workshop will review action steps and guidelines in communicating about and responding to traumatic incidents such as suicide to promote healing and reduce risk for vulnerable populations.

Objectives:

- Understand the effect of safe messaging on suicide contagion
- Analyze use of media to reduce risk and disseminate resources
- Discuss strategies for implementing safe messaging strategies in schools, organizations and municipalities
