Women Matter! Five Part Educational Series

Description

Women Matter!, the ground-breaking series created by SAMHSA and Advocates for Human Potential, Inc., to address the specific substance use treatment and recovery needs of women is adapted to support a deeper understanding of the experiences and needs of women in the North Country and help participants apply best practices to their work with women in the North Country.

The series includes:

- An Introduction to Women, Substance Use Disorders (SUD) and Health
- Families and Relationships in Women's Substance Use and Recovery
- Addressing Co-Occurring Mental Health Issues and Trauma in Women with Substance Use Disorders
- Recovery and Support for Women Involved with Criminal Justice
- Gender Responsive Co-ed Treatment and Recovery for Women

This free series is for anyone who provides services to women who may be at risk for or living with Substance Use Disorder (SUD) and Neonatal Abstinence Syndrome (NAS).

How It Works:

Complete a short tutorial of the online educational platform.

Each self-paced module includes:

1. a pre-recorded webinar,
2. an option of discussing the webinar in online chat and/or Zoom group,
3. a resource drop to find or share resources, and
4. a check list to keep track of completed work.

The entire series will run for six months, allowing one month for each module to be completed.
